Dear Dr Antonio Paez:

I hope that my email finds you well and am sorry to be writing with some disappointing news. You will possibly be aware that we operate a two-stage process of review at Educational Review, where submissions are first of all read by the editor to assess their suitability for the journal.

It is always difficult making such decisions. However, I have now considered your paper and write to inform you that unfortunately, I cannot proceed to the second stage of review. This is a decision made with respect to our own aims as a journal since Educational Review is aiming to prioritise work of a general interest and application that is accessible for a non-specialist international audience.

I sincerely hope you have success in placing your manuscript elsewhere and would suggest that you try a specialist journal. Indeed, the Taylor & Francis editorial team might be in touch with some specific suggestions.

Thank you for considering Educational Review. I hope the outcome of this submission will not discourage you from the submission of future manuscripts.

With best wishes

Jane
